For a Chinese woman, marriage is a very important decision and they are too overwhelmed by their dreams of finding a perfect love. There is a wide literacy gap between the men and women in China. The population of women in China is higher in number as compared to men. This is why marriage markets are held throughout the China for seeking foreign men for marriage by the Chinese singles and their parents. They flock towards these markets every weekend for meeting a life partner.

Most of these unmarried women are highly educated and talented. There are women with PhDs or master degrees as well. These women are also getting six figure salaries with a growth oriented career. They are interested in getting married to a good looking and well settled guy for the sake of their status and to meet norms of a modern society. These highly educated women in China find it hard to find love and marriage prospect. Even marriage agencies are unable to help them in this matter. Their higher education, age and their demand for the perfect love restrict lots of prospects to meet their criteria.

Most of these Chinese women are left out of the marriage market and are unable to find perfect matches. This is called Sheng Nu Phenomenon, where these educated women are left over. It is a tradition in the China; women get married from the men of equal in status. Hence women in topmost positions and lowest positions are unable to find any option.

These women have to look for international markets for finding a suitable partner of their lives. They look-out of their traditions and cultures to get married. The marriage crises for the women in China are totally dependent on the high social status and class differences in the China. Chinese men make sacrifices while choosing a woman for them, but women don't scarily on the social status. Consequently, the majority of the left over women turn towards international dating sites to find partners equal to their status and standard.
